

Parents: COVID-19 Prevention for Kids

by Jill Fandrich, PharmD, CRPh

Book Summary

The true measure of parental love lies in the meticulousness of disease prevention for your children. In shielding your little ones from harm through nutrition, healthy habits, and a watchful eye, you bestow upon them the invaluable gift of a flourishing future. The greatest gift you can give your children is the foundation of a healthy life. By taking proactive disease prevention measures, you equip them with the armor they need to face any health challenge that may come their way.

Parents: COVID-19 Prevention For Kids is an interactive digital book with dozens of pictures and hyperlinks, sending you on a fun, light-hearted, humorous, informative, and educational journey of thought and discovery.

How are you protecting your kids from these and other tiny villains?

What measures have you taken to deflect them?

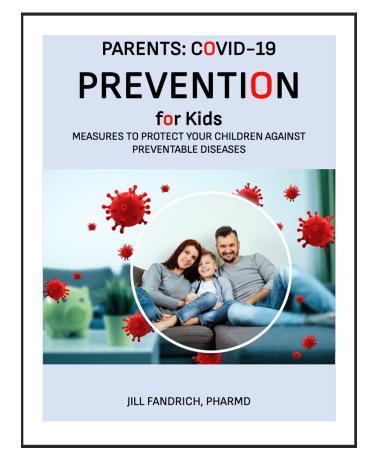

Is their immune system as strong as it can be?

Do you have all the information you need for them to resist invasion?

Where do you get your information?

You are a key player in shielding your children by deflection, using simple methods with long-term benefits. The body's immune system is the best defense against these vicious foreign bodies. By building up your child's system with these simple yet vital regimens, they will be able to ward off a multitude of intruders and prevent them from ever taking control of their bodies.

Their minds and the thoughts they think are an integral part of their ability to defend themselves against cellular assailants. Not only will you take steps to help strengthen their bodies, but your mind as well. Now is the time to integrate critical thinking into the health regimen of you and your children and use logic and common sense as a guide. It's time to gear up, take charge of your family's health, body, mind, and spirit, and never give these invaders a chance.
